The Times editor was glad to grasp the hand of N. Howlett, one of the substantial citizens of St. Francois county, on last Saturday. It was the occasion of Mr. Howlett's first visit to the Times office since the present management took charge. You see, Mr. Howlett is one of those old time Kentuckians and feels just a little extra warmth in his soul for a fellow traveler who hails from that country of fine horses and pretty women. In addition to being a former Kentuckian, Mr. Howlett is a loyal friend of the Times and bade us godspeed in the work here. Fact of the matter it was just a little ray of sunshine that our good friend brought with him to cheer us along life's tiresome journey. Thank you, Brother Howlett.

He had spent a week with parents here before the Commencement Exercises, and after this week, will return for a brief vacation, then begin duty at the Mullanthal Hospital, St. Louis, the first of July. The future certainly looks bright for the young doctor, and we wish him a great career in the noble calling he has answered.

TAKE PLENTY OF TIME TO EAT.
There is a saying that "rapid eating is slow suicide." If you have formed the habit of eating too rapidly you are most likely suffering from indigestion or constipation, which will result eventually in serious illness unless corrected. Digestion begins in the mouth. Food should be thoroughly masticated and insalivated. Then when you have a fullness of the stomach or feel dull and stupid after eating, take one of Chamberlain's Tablets. Many severe cases of stomach trouble and constipation have been cured by the use of these tablets. They are easy to take and most agreeable in effect. Sold by all dealers.

GRAIN LOUSE ON WHEAT NOT SERIOUS

By Leonard Haseman

The common grain louse is now coming in for its share of attention along with the army worm, the chinch bug and the Hessian fly. It is a small green or yellowish-green louse which collects in the heads of wheat. The mature louse has wings. It attacks wheat by sucking the sap. In some localities it is very abundant and may injure the late wheat. Injury to ripening wheat is usually slight although the pest may be abundant. This is not the much dreaded green bug which comes early in the spring and which attacks the stems and leaves of wheat completely killing the plant.

The grain louse develops every rapidly and when the weather is favorable for its development and unfavorable for its enemies, it is able to do considerable damage to wheat.

The past spring has been a favorable one for the grain louse and as a result the Missouri College of Agriculture is receiving samples from many sections of the state with requests for information as to its identity and means of control.

There is nothing that can be done to control this pest at this time. Spraying might help but it is too expensive to carry out on a large scale in the wheat field. Unless the weather in the next week or two be unusual, the parasites, lady beetles and other enemies of the lice will develop rapidly and destroy them. Judging from the samples which the Missouri College of Agriculture has received, these enemies of the lice are already at work throughout the state and once they begin to attack this pest they soon control it. There is probably little need to fear grain louse unless it be extremely abundant on wheat which is already suffering from dry weather.

This community was shocked to hear Thursday night one of its best citizens, Mr. H. G. Ballard, had been killed by a fire burning in his barn. He and Fred and Henry Wray had been living alone for some time and in the afternoon the boys went to the store about 1-4 miles and when they left she was on the bed and there was some fire in the fire place where they had prepared dinner and as they came home they saw the smoke and hurried home and found her lying in the yard a short distance from the porch and was burned so badly that she only lived a few minutes. Henry Wray risked his life trying to save her but it was all in vain as the flesh was burnt to a crisp when he reached her. She was 75 years and a few months old at the time of her death and had been a member of the Christian church at Libertyville since she was a young girl. She has been crippled for the past few years, has not been away from home for many years. Her funeral was conducted by Nick Beavil at the home and the remains laid to rest in the family burying ground on the farm owned by her. Mr. English of Farmington came down Friday and held an inquest. The deceased leaves to mourn her death one sister, Mrs. Wm. Hine, and a host of relatives and friends.

THE CHAUTAUQUA

Many thousands of Missourians and other Middle Westerners are talking or thinking about "the Chautauqua" these days. In hundreds of small cities and even villages here and there the people are preparing for the summer Chautauqua Assembly. Local newspapers are publishing the home-town program, with half-tones cuts of "headliners" and more or less fulsome press notices and biographical sketches, telling how great an orator or how nearly divine a musician is the subject of each sketch. Out of the farming districts the whole family is making the decision that it can't afford to miss the Chautauqua this year, even though farm work must be somewhat slighted. Maybe, anyhow, the hired man can be induced to stay at home and run things.

Great is the Chautauqua. Only those who keep in touch with small-town and rural conditions can appreciate how great is this highly modern movement, how widely it has spread, how intensively its promoters are studying and uplifting and modernizing it has become. Even to the student of the Chautauqua it is surprising to find that nowadays the towns of 1200 to 1500 population are regarded as "backward" unless they hold a Chautauqua Assembly in the course of the summer, with four or five days of oratory, music, lectures, humorous entertainments and classes for instruction along various lines. This year a considerable number of the smaller towns in Missouri, to mention but one State, are to be initiated into the Chautauqua order. Next year other towns, catching the happy infection, will fall into line.

Until times comparatively recent the ordinary town relied chiefly for its public entertainment upon the Fourth of July oration delivered by some politician of more or less note, who poured forth spread-eagle pyrotechnics from the lofty height of a plank rostrum built for the occasion in the picnic grove and was heard only by the graybeards, while the younger element was popping firecrackers, drinking pink lemonade, dancing the pre-tango steps on a rough board platform under the trees, and otherwise diverting themselves so that they might miss the agony of hearing the Declaration of Independence read monotonously by the Town Clerk or the High School principal. The old time Independence Day oration still is heard here and there, but the Chautauqua has diminished its glory.

The Chautauqua supplies patriotic pabulum for the multitude. It brings to town men and women of light and leading, from far-off places, some of whom are widely noted, with others less renowned, but no less interesting by reason of the messages they deliver. There has grown up in the past decade an army of Chautauqua speakers and entertainers. There are men in the professions and in business—country lawyers, country editors, country pastors, among them—who have built up for themselves Chautauqua reputations which give them a respectful hearing and a fairly lucrative fee for an hour's talk in a shady grove or beneath one of those high tents which nowadays are fanned out to the Chautauqua towns, moving along with the season.

The Chautauqua entertainer is a member of a new profession that has developed since the beginning of the Twentieth Century. He is a new kind of knight of the road, an uncommercial traveler who gives more than he receives, for what he says or sings or "chalk talks" entertains the people living far from the so-called centers of culture. The Chautauqua serves to sharpen the wits of the average citizen, broaden his intellectual ranges, lift him out of the routine and thereby make him a happier and more useful member of society.

It is gratifying to observe that here in Missouri the Chautauqua is taking a firmer hold upon the people and becoming more and more of an educational adjunct, while still retaining enough of the merely amusing element in the programme to prevent the introduction of an excess of the serious into the heated season.

Tell them that you saw their ad in The Times.
